

About this new website

About this new website

The new NEMO website - How to use it

This new NEMO web site is organized with different access levels:

- Looking "from outside": before login, you have access to the general information: description of the NEMO numerical platform, contacts, list of projects, reference manuals, publications and gallery.
- After registration and using your login: you are a NEMO user.

You have gained access to the "Using NEMO" tab allowing you to find all information to use the system distribution (the NEMO reference source files, scripts and reference configurations).

IMPORTANT: NEMO sources are distributed through Subversion using a generic account you need to keep in mind for the extraction step (see your registration mail).

Afterwards, you may need also the access to the "Developing with NEMO" tab. Useful to make some changes in the source code, develop your own configuration, and follow/contribute to the ongoing developments using TRAC, see " TRAC access" below.

- If you are member of the NEMO Developer's Committee or member of the NEMO System Team , you will gain access to their private pages.

All the information is not visible at first glance:

All the ticks in the top 2 lines (in blue) are clickable.

You need to log in to see the whole web site.

By clicking on each tick of the first titles lines, you will discover what is below (on the second line).

Overview of the site is available through the site map ou the tag cloud (top right)

Back to hame page is available by clicking on the NEMO logo (top left)

TRAC access

To follow/contribute to the ongoing developments, you will need to access to the TRAC tab of the website (under "Developing with NEMO"). The requested login/password are the same as the NEMO web site.

Publications

All publications using NEMO should quote the reference publications listed here

Publications using NEMO can be found here (you can add yours!)

All comments/ suggestions are welcome by mail here

The NEMO System Team

No